Introduction

As announced on 21 October 2022, NZL has entered into an unconditional agreement to acquire a forestry estate in the Manawatū-Whanganui region of the North Island. The estate is comprised of five individual properties with a total area of approximately 2,383 hectares. The settlement date is 15 April 2023 with the entire estate to be leased to New Zealand Forest Leasing for a period of 20 years.

New Zealand has some of the best growing conditions for Pinus radiata (Pine trees) in the world. New Zealand also has the lowest cost and lowest carbon footprint production of major classes of protein and other food in the world, with NZL providing the only pure-play NZX listed exposure to the underlying productive land.

Post forest acquisition, NZL will own 14,093¹ hectares of rural land with a 12.1 year¹ weighted average lease term (by value), with 100% occupancy across eight tenants. This transaction increases forecast FY24 earnings and dividends per share by +17.4%, increases NZL's WALT by +34.4% and adds materially to the scale and diversity of NZL's asset and tenant base.

NZL considers this acquisition further expands its offer to investors by growing its lease income and broadening its investment exposure to high quality New Zealand rural land.

NZL's strategy remains to acquire and hold for the long-term, quality rural land in New Zealand, provide growing and stable lease income coupled with attractive risk-adjusted long-term capital growth from the underlying land holdings.

Acquisition Funding Mechanism - 1:3 Pro-Rata Rights Issue

- After considering several acquisition funding options (detailed further on page 21), the most earnings and dividend accretive option is to purchase 100% of the forest funded by a 1:3 pro-rata rights issue (detailed further on page 6).
- WW NZL has received indications of interest from a recent European Roadshow in Germany, Luxembourg and Switzerland which provides the Board of NZL with confidence that should shareholders not wish to take up their rights in NZL that the Company can access capital, expand its asset base as planned and further broaden its share register.
- WW NZL also points to its past acquisition history and subsequent revaluations that have occurred as a result of the lease structures that NZRLM has implemented on behalf of the company.
- NZL encourages shareholders to take up their rights, NZL considers the future opportunities and the portfolio assets are of high quality. They provide the opportunity for attractive risk adjusted returns with a strong long-term income and diversity profile.

SECTION 3 TIMBER AND CARBON MARKET OUTLOOK

NZL: Timber and Carbon Market Outlook

The outlook for timber and forestry investments in New Zealand remains positive, this is largely attributed to:

- Favorable Growing Conditions: New Zealand's climate and soil conditions are well-suited for growing trees, particularly radiata pine, which is the dominant species planted. The country's temperate climate, abundant rainfall, and fertile soils provide ideal conditions for fast-growing, high-quality trees that can be harvested for timber.
- 2. High Demand for Timber: There is strong domestic and international demand for New Zealand timber products, particularly from the growing construction sector. The demand is expected to increase over the next few decades due to the global trend of using wood as a sustainable and renewable building material.
- 3. Stable Political Environment: New Zealand has a stable and predictable political and legal environment, which provides a favorable investment climate for forestry. The government has also been supportive of the forestry industry, particularly through initiatives such as the Emissions Trading Scheme (ETS).
- 4. Diversification: Investing in forestry can provide diversification benefits to an investor's portfolio, as it is not typically correlated with other asset classes. It can also be a long-term investment, providing a stable source of income over the life cycle of the forest.
- 5. Environmental Benefits: Forests also provide a range of environmental benefits, including carbon sequestration, soil conservation, and biodiversity protection. Investing in forestry can, therefore, provide social and environmental benefits in addition to financial returns.
- New Zealand timber market outlook is positive with the use of timber in construction forecast to also increase by +25% between 2022 and 2030. Log export returns are expected to grow to $4.0b by 2026 with other wood products adding a further $3.1b.
- Additionally, New Zealand uses an emissions trading scheme (ETS) as a tool to reduce carbon emissions. Forests are a very cost efficient method of sequestering carbon, this sequestration is tradable and able to be used to offset emissions the tradable units are called NZ Units (NZUs).
- The outlook for the price growth of NZUs is strong, the Climate Change Commission (www.climatecommission.govt.nz) recommends an increasing carbon price to encourage the behavioural changes necessary to address climate change this is likely to be supported both by market forces and government legislation.
- NZU values (and therefore the value of producing them) have grown at a CAGR of +30% per annum over the last two years and are forecast to grow at a further +14% p.a. over the next eight years.

SECTION 4 KEY RISKS

NZL: Key Risks

KEY RISKS
Land Value Risk	NZL will realise its strategy for capital growth in the value of rural land that it acquires only if NZL acquires rural land at a purchase price that is less than the rural land's future value. This requires NZL to predict future value when acquiring rural land, which involves inherent uncertainty. Acquiring unproductive land and other external factors may reduce land value below the price that NZL paid to acquire that land.
	NZL's rural land is currently concentrated in the dairy sector and until there is greater diversification in its rural land holdings, the value of NZL's land is susceptible to value decreases if there is a sustained downturn in the dairy sector. The acquisition of the forestry estate will help to mitigate this risk by diversifying NZL's rural land holdings into the forestry sector. NZL's rural land assets are also each of a relatively large scale making the number of potential buyers more limited. Therefore, any realisation of NZL's rural land assets may take longer to realise for an appropriate sale price.
Tenant Risk (financial)	NZL's income is rental payments received from Tenants who lease NZL's rural land. Tenants are exposed to the financial risks associated with operations on the land (for example, commodity price fluctuations, increases in operating costs, health risks to stock). If Tenants do not manage those risks or lack the financial capacity to absorb those risks Tenants may default on lease payments to NZL. If NZL is required to replace a Tenant, NZL may have a period where it is receiving no or reduced income from the rural land that it owns while a replacement is appointed. This could impact on NZL's ability to pay dividends. Accordingly, NZL investors are indirectly exposed to operational farming risks given that those risks can cause Tenants to become insolvent and reduce NZL's income.
	NZL currently has seven Tenants leasing its rural land holdings and will bring on one additional tenant as part of the acquisition of the forestry estate (whose financial position is dependent on the forestry and carbon industries, not dairy). Diversifying this Tenant base over time is a key mitigant for NZL to ensure it is not overly exposed to the financial to the financial to the financial to the financial
Tenant Risk (operational)	Operational practices of Tenants on NZL's rural land could damage the rural land and decrease its value. For example, poor environmental or unsustainable farming practices could reduce production on the rural land and lead to regulatory actions.
	As with the Tenant risk (financial), NZL's tenant selection criteria becomes a key mitigant where, in addition to selecting Tenant's that are financially sound, Tenant's need to demonstrate a high degree of operational experience and a history of using best farming/agricultural practices.

KEY RISKS
Financing Risk	To grow and diversify its rural land holdings, NZL needs to access capital to fund acquisitions. Capital is sourced from a combination of bank debt and proceeds from equity issuances.
	NZL's ability to raise capital from equity issuances will be subject to its financial performance, investor sentiment and prevailing market conditions. These factors cannot be assured.
	For bank debt, NZL has a medium-term target of maintaining a loan to value ratio (LVR) of 30% and, a bank covenant requiring the LVR to be no more than 40%. The LVR of NZL is currently 37.7% as at 31 December 2022. Borrowing to an LVR at the higher end of this range has enabled NZL to act on acquisition opportunities as they arose and grow its rural land holdings more rapidly. However, this has also reduced the headroom that NZL has with its bank covenant which could be a material risk if rural land values decreased. In addition, this exposes NZL more to interest rate increases.
Capital Expenditure Risk	There could be unbudgeted capital expenditure on rural land that NZL acquires reducing the expected return from that land for NZL. Such unbudgeted capital expenditure, or capital expenditure cost overruns may occur if repairs and maintenance are not being properly undertaken, which will generally be the responsibility of the Tenant. Changes in environmental laws or environmental law non-compliance could give rise to unforeseen capital expenditure necessary for compliance or remediation.
COVID-19 Pandemic Risks	COVID-19 has and continues to cause significant supply chain disruptions for both domestic and international markets. To date, global supply chains have prioritised the delivery of food products, minimising disruption to the New Zealand dairy sector. However, supply chain disruptions are continuing and if they do start impacting more on food products, this could increase spoilage of dairy products, cause increases in operating costs and a reduction in profitability for Tenants.
Extreme Weather Events	Climate change is expected to increase the frequency/severity of extreme weather events. Extreme weather can cause long-term damage to NZL's assets this damage may include slips, flooding or windthrow while the infrastructure necessary for tenants to conduct their operations may be also be damaged or destroyed. Extreme weather events may also cause significant supply chain disruptions for both domestic and international markets. Supply chain distruptions could increase spoilage of dairy products, cause increases in operating costs and a reduction in profitability for Tenants.
Forestry Industry Regulation	New Zealand's Emissions Trading Scheme is relatively mature in a global context. However, legislation is changed frequently as the country works towards national emissions budgets. There is therefore a risk that the government makes changes to the Emissions Trading Scheme and its associated legislation that negatively impacts the returns to the tenant of the forestry estate or NZL as owner of the forestry estate.
Default Risk	NZL has entered into unconditional agreements to purchase the forestry estate. If the equity raising is unsuccessful, there is a risk that NZL defaults on its agreements. NZL has entered into a subscription agreement with the Tenant of the forestry estate to fund up to $18 million of the purchase price, which gives NZL the option to purchase a lesser percentage of the forestry estate (as outlined further on page 21). NZL has also received indications of interests from investors in Europe, which may provide NZL with access to capital from new markets. If absolutely necessary, NZL may be able to access some form of bridge financing until such time as NZL can dispose of certain assets (including as outlined further on page 21).
